Hyatt, Blair and Woolley Named on Athletic Board.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 15.—Yale's athletic board of control has been badly shot to pieces by the war. A reorganization has been necessary because of the absence of its members in some branch of the military service, and the election of three members was to-day amounced at the university. The new members are Robert Fleming Blair of Cleveland, Alton Rufus Hyatt of Mariden and John Ellot Woolley of Brooklyn. All three are members of the senior class of the academic department.

FOOTBALL CAPTAIN NOT REAL LEADER

Position Carries Too Much Responsibility for Average College Player.

QUARTERBACK COMMANDS

By SOL METEGER.

Coach W. and J. Football Team. lieves in leadership-and American sport demands a leader. But in football the rule rarely holds. My own limited experience with the gridiron game leads me to believe that the leader of a team -the captain-rarely is a leader, and that the added responsibility often proves too much of a load to carry.

In other words, the captain cracks under the strain, or the load, or the added responsibility, whatever you choose to call it, and the result is a team without a leader, a team that is not a team for the good reason that a good football eleven must have eleven players. It cannot be composed of ten players and a captain,

It is a difficult matter to prove why this is so. One naturally would conclude that a brilliant player elected to the captaincy of an eleven would play that much harder on account of the honor and responsibility. That is the assumption of brilliant players all over America. But in the majority of cases in my own experience this has not proved the case. In short, the job of leadership evidently carries too much responsibility for the average American college athlete to stand up under. Yet the fact remains that a football team has little if any need for a captain. The honor is more social than athletic. The responsibility that goes with the captaincy is an assumed responsibility. Outside of the duty of being present at the toss of a coin before a game and choosing whether his team will kick off or receive and of making that choice after his eleven has been scored upon, the captain of a football team has no official duties. It is a difficult matter to prove why

One season when I had a very good eleven I had a very poor captain. He was much loved by all the supporters of the team because of the brilliant game he had played in former seasons. But he was unable to make his eleven except as a quarterback, where his judgment was atroclous. I found myself in a fix.

It is odd how the loyal supporters of a college football team know the business of running a team far better than the coach. Many men of sound business or professional sense who would resent any suggestions from outsiders relative to their day's work have no hesitancy at Flushing's Leading Golfer May See Service in France With Gas Defence Unit.

OTHER NEWS OF LINKS

Always a nervy golfer when competing on the links, Gardiner W. White may soon have his courage tested in another way. If will be recalled that the several times champton of the Funking Golf Club recently enlisted in the Gas Defence Service, which, let it be added, is not going to be any picnic.

According to information learned yesterday from the United States recruiting station, the duties of many in gas service will be largely mechanical, but of such a nature that they will most likely have to leave for France in the near future. Part of the work includes the trying out of gas masks to test their chamical efficiency in combating the fumes of fire fiame liquid.
